This is the story in words and more than 150 photographs of Skip Swain – a young guy from Kenmore, New York, who in 1968 at age nineteen was drafted and sent to Vietnam. The book focuses extensively on Swain's training and ultimate service as an infantryman with a one of a kind outfit: B Company "The Warlords," 123rd Aviation Battalion, Americal Division. The Warlords' unique and dangerous mission was to fly around looking for the enemy and when they found him, rather than kill him their goal was to "snatch" him for interrogation. The book recounts in detail Swain's and The Warlords' actions and contributions during his fourteen months in Vietnam. The Warlords became very good at what they did – capturing hundreds of the enemy. Their success earned them fame – as well as a bounty on their heads. Using the results of many hours of interviews, as well as hundreds of other sources including: Army records, unit histories, personal recollections, photos, e-mail, books, newspapers, magazines, and Web sites, the author tells the story - frequently in the men's own words – of the anxiety, the excitement, the sacrifices, the often humorous attempts to relieve stress, and the fear as Swain and his buddies did what our country asked of them.
