Faith Lee hasn't seen her biker father in years, and when he turns up dying on her doorstep, pressing a small key into her hand, she doesn't know what to do.

In the next week her life is turned upside down; her apartment is ransacked and she is threatened by shadowy figures in dark streets. She knows the mysterious key must have something to do with it, and she sets off cross country to meet her father's old club friends to get their help.

She has barely made it out of the city limits when she is attacked by a rival biker gang. Thankfully a strange man comes to her rescue. Jack 'Spider' Johnson claims her father sent him to look after her, and with no one else to turn to, she warily accepts his help. The feeling of being back in a leather seat and on the road once more is a potent aphrodisiac and Faith finds herself wanting to trust the mysterious stranger.

But with hundreds of miles between them and their destination it might not be the wisest idea.

EXCERPT

He blinked to refocus his thoughts. This was just breakfast, and she was still Grant's daughter, and they had said friendship, nothing more. He kept his eyes on his food, emptying the plate and his first cup of coffee without looking at her. He knew he had to get his body back under control. As he stood up to pour himself a second cup, he caught her eyes on him. .

"Faith, stop it!" When she met his eyes, he groaned low in his throat and went around to stand beside her. "You're not making it easy for me, you know?"

She stood up, crowding him. He stepped back, so she wouldn't feel the fullness of his apparently unending desire for her.

"You look hot when you're asleep, all uncovered. That didn't make it easy on me, either."

"Faith," he protested, but it sounded more like a groan of desire. It was fueled by a shot of lust that held him in place when his brain was telling him to move.
