Angie Wilder's past is shrouded with secrets. Since she was a child, she's woken with her sheets shredded and unexplained scratches on her headboard. As she matured, Angie became aware of her seductive power over men. Her curvaceous body lures them, even as she fights the need to succumb to her desires. Warned by her parents that she has a greater purpose in life than falling for one of the local boys, Angie struggles to stay innocent while her body betrays her.

Angie's allure eventually puts her family in danger, and she's forced to flee. Her mother tells her to find a place called Evergreen Heights, and from the moment she steps foot into the idyllic town, she feels like she may have found her true home. Especially once she meets Hank and Woody, the handsome and rugged leaders of the small community. Soon enough it becomes clear that the burly bachelors have been waiting for her their entire lives. Now they just have to convince Angie she doesn't just belong in Evergreen Heights, she belongs with them.

EXCERPT:

"Shhh, quiet!" Angie tried to hush her friend, gingerly lowering her hands to the table, encouraging a similar effect in Mindy, but the waitress just scoffed and beamed at her young friend.

"The two of them though, you'll have them both? I mean, not many girls can manage with one fella, let alone two of them banging about. And there's really not one you prefer over the other?"

Angie closed her eyes and smiled dreamily. "There really isn't. They're both so..." her voice went lower, and Mindy leaned in to catch every syllable. "A week ago, I never thought I'd fall in love with anyone, much less two men at once! And the whole arrangement, with the clan and... Lord, I feel so silly saying this, but me as a queen? I just... It's so much. But it also... It just feels..."

"Right?" Mindy prompted quietly, and Angie smiled again, then bit her lip and nodded.
