This is a reproduction pattern of the antique sampler sewn in 1823. The original sampler was in excellent condition. It is an outstanding example of needle art work from a little girl learning her letters. Additional research and input from family members has enabled Susan to put together a brief history of the stitcher who completed this extraordinary work.

Finding an early American sampler this old was just simply luck for Susan. In the course of her work on other antique sampler pattern reproductions, the Elizabeth Taylor antiques sampler came up in a discussion with a family member currently holding the sampler. Susan was fortunate to be able to borrow the sampler for the time needed to reproduce the pattern for this incredible piece of Americana.
